

Bawarski first at Math Club competition

After many rigorous mathematic challenges, the Math Club singles competition has come to an end. On Tuesday, March 27, the final competition began. The only regulars to attend were Alex Bawarski, Nathan Hawthorne, Brandon Clark and Pat Fink.

Sean Fink showed up for his third competition that day and veteran mathematician, Eric Naioti, showed up right at the end of the contest to try and maintain his hold on second place. Some 30 pizza-filled, soda-guzzling, mind-mashing minutes later, the match was decided.

Maintaining his place in first with a whopping 57 points, and winning the gold medal was Alex Bawarski, who scored a remarkable 18 points at the finale, more than anyone had scored at any single competition this year.

Taking home the silver for the year was Eric Naioti with 49 points, beating third place, bronze-medalist Nathan Hawthorne by a mere two points. Pat Fink scored a total of 44 points, which is impressive considering he received only two points in the first competition of the year. Pat is the favorite to win singles next year because all of his previous competition were seniors.

Rounding out the regulars was Brandon Clark with a respectable 35 points. Brandon missed out on one of the competitions in the middle of the year, where all four of the other contenders scored 14 points.

Whether or not there are prizes is yet to be announced by club advisor, Mrs. Ryan, but for the competitive nature of these mathletes, the matches and snacks were enough to keep them coming back for more.

Raider rally comes up short in season-opening loss to ES-M

The comeback bid fell short for the Fulton laxmen last night as they faced the Spartans from ES-M in their season opener. The Raiders outscored the Spartans 7-3 in the second half, but it just wasn't enough to pull out the win as they had to settle for a 10-9 loss.

Going into halftime, the Raiders were down 7-2 and it seemed like the game was slipping out of control. Last year's team may have panicked and put their heads down and left the field with what could have easily been a 10 goal defeat.

The 2012 edition of the squad battled back behind good showings from senior attackmen Ross Maxam and Bryan Benton. Maxam tallied 5 points on 3 goals and 2 assists and sparked the offense with his composure, quickness and creativity. Benton added an impressive 4 goals on the night, all from close range, with his natural ability to finish in tight spaces.

Also adding goals for the Raider cause were seniors Joe Sutton and Tyler Lockwood, each putting in one. Sutton also added an assist on the night.

The defense was more than impressive after the break. They flipped a switch and seemed to play with much more aggressiveness, which resulted in turnovers and transitioned into goals for the Raider offense. Leading the defensive efforts were Mark Pollock, Joe Cortese, and Brandon Lockwood. All three used their athleticism to its fullest extent to provide hope for the Fulton team and fans.

Starting goalie Colin Blake was magnificent between the pipes, trotting off the turf with a 16 save performance. His night was more than just the saves since time and time again he would come out of the cage to ward off an attackmen until his defender caught up.

Head Coach Craig Halladay was pleased with the second half saying, "I don't think we threw the ball away as much. We stayed composed. And I think we played them more aggressively." He also stated to the team after the game, "It shows a lot about you guys as a team being able to come back from that. I wish we didn't spot them that 7-2 lead, but either way it's a good test for us."

The Raiders return to the field Monday hosting #1 state ranked Jamesville-Dewitt with JV action beginning at 4:30. The Rams are the returning state champs and a team that finished #2 in the Powerade Fab 50 a year ago, a national poll. Next Thursday the homestand continues when they face a Westhill team in a non-league contest that will surely be exciting. Varsity action begins at 4:30, with the JV game at 6:30.

GRB art students taking part in "Memory Project"

Students in Ms. Koblentz's art classes are once again taking part in The Memory Project, creating original artistic renditions of orphaned children. The drawings and paintings are created from a photograph, and when finished are given to the children, many of whom have few personal possessions. Senior Dallaslyn Lamb, showing both the original photo and her finished work, is one of several students taking part in the project. (Hannah Dunsmoor photo)

A grand father in the true sense of the word

By Madeline Clark

Once upon a time there was a man named Alex Grimshaw. Alex was a man of many stories; someone whose life could best be told through the tales that others had of him, all positive of course.

Alex was a man of many trades and experiences that allowed him to always have something to tell you. He was a person who always had his nose in a book and his hands on gold old fashion pipe.

He was person who loved sitting on his porch after an afternoon of attending to his tomato plants in the garden. He was a man who enjoyed every meal, and the conversations in the kitchen that occurred afterwards. He was there to lend a hand or small piece of advice when others needed it. Alex was a man who enjoyed the small things in life and could tell you why.

Alex had a large family and many friends, all of whom he loved every week. Even when things looked grim, Alex kept his chin up, and tried to tell his family to do the same. He never gave in, because he wanted to be there for all whom he loved.

But as all people do, Alex got tired. All of the fighting had worn him down. Alex understood it was time to rest. Not wanting to leave everyone in the dust, he gave one piece of advice, one last time. To his middle grandchild he simply said, "never stop writing, it's a lost art." She promised she would because as all people know, Alex Grimshaw was a man who loved to read.

Alex was a man with a story. Alex was a man who loved and was loved. Alex Grimshaw was my Grandfather, whom I loved very dearly. May he finally get the rest that he truly deserves, because he was truly a good man.

"To his middle grandchild he simply said, "never stop writing, it's a lost art." She promised she would because as all people know, Alex Grimshaw was a man who loved to read."

very dearly. He provided for them when they needed him most, in any way that he could. He was a man who did what he could to keep you level headed. He was there on Monday mornings when his grandchildren needed a ride to school and on Saturday nights when their parents went out on the town. He gave coin sets on Christmas and books on birthdays. He was a man who loved and was loved.

When Alex fell ill, his family and friends were there in support, spending nights by his bedside and sending best wishes. Alex was a fighter because he never gave up, trying to make a comeback

No fooling! Trout season opens this Sunday

By Daniel Summerville

Sportsmen in Central New York have relatively little to do during the month of March. With most hunting seasons over and fishing seasons yet to get started, March is one of the slowest months of the year for sportsmen. However, April brings with it the first of many fishing seasons; trout season.

Trout is one of the most sought after sport fish in New York. There is no doubt that on the first there will be countless anglers lining their favorite trout streams in an attempt to catch some fish. Trout are fast, smart and strong fighters. Most trout that are caught only measure a few inches in length, but even these small fish put up a fight. With the recent warm weather the trout should be fairly active, hopefully making it easier for anglers to catch them.

For most trout species, four can be taken per day, and they can be of any length. Lake Trout are the only exception, they must be at least 21 inches long, and the daily limit for these fish is three per person. It is illegal to possess any fish smaller than the required sizes, or to possess more than the limit any given day. Failure to adhere to these regulations could result in a ticket.

Trout are notoriously picky and can be quite hard to catch. They tend to hang out in the eddies behind large rocks, where the slow current allows them to rest without being pushed downstream. If a particle of food or a lure drifts down alongside them they may or may not go after it. It depends on the mood of the fish. An angler can cast alongside a trout filled eddy all day and if the trout do not like the look of the bait, they will not bite.

Trout is the first of many fishing seasons due to open in the coming months. Walleye starts in early May, and most other fishing seasons start in June. Until more seasons open, trout fishing is one of the only choices that anglers have. Many casual fishermen scoff at the idea of sitting by a river or stream in a mid-April drizzle, but for countless anglers in the area, trout fishing is definitely worth it.

Bizarre news of the day: Being a redhead is no joke

Redheads have been the butt of jokes for centuries but now it appears they could actually feel more pain.

Researchers have begun a trial to see whether pale-skinned and red-haired people react differently to pain. They believe that redheads may need greater levels of anesthetic during operations or increased painkillers.

Researchers at Southampton University Hospital have recruited redheaded volunteers aged over 30, anesthetized them and gave them small electric shocks on the thigh.

They were then tested to see if they felt more pain than a control group who had black or brown hair.

Researchers believe that the same gene which determines whether someone has red hair is also involved in the production of endorphins, the body's natural painkiller. Red hair is the result of a variant of a gene that plays a key role in human hair and skin color.

The same researchers also found in 2009 that redheads were more anxious about dental treatment and more than twice as likely to avoid a visit. A separate Danish study suggests red headed people feel the cold more but could handle eating hot food.

"The art and science of anesthesiology is determining just the right amount of anesthesia to achieve unconsciousness, pain tolerance and suppression of memory without causing adverse consequences, such as cardiac or pulmonary complications.

"Red hair is apparently an important element in this decision."

Minor details aside, Hunger Games is a winner

By Taylor Milliken

It would be hard not to know that the premiere of the extremely anticipated movie The Hunger Games was last Friday, March 23. So far it has more than lived up to the advance hype as the movie topped the charts during the premiere, making it the third best debut of all time.

The Hunger Games is an action-filled survival drama based on the first of three best-selling young adult novels by Suzanne Collins. Jennifer Lawrence stars as Katniss Everdeen, a teen girl who fights in a televised battle-to-the-death in an arena against 23 other tributes, which was ordered by her society's rulers. Everdeen becomes an icon for hope for freedom against the totalitarian government.

During the weekend premiere, the post-apocalyptic action movie opened with a staggering $155 million at U.S. and Canadian box offices, making it the highest domestic opening for a movie that is not a sequel. The premiere of Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows: Part 2 is ranked as the best debut of all time (even though it wasn't the premiere of a first book/movie), Dark Knight is ranked second, and The Hunger Games has broken through as number three to make movie history.

I personally went and saw the movie on Sunday, March 25, and it was truly incredible. The visuals were amazing and portrayed exactly how I pictured them while reading the book. The tributes, the capitol, and arena all looked fantastic. I could not take my eyes off of the screen. Each character was cast perfectly and the roles were taken on amazingly by Jennifer Lawrence (Katniss), Josh Hutcherson (Peeta), Liam Hensworth (Gale), and all of the other actors/actresses.

But as is always the case, I have also come across a few complaints from people about the movie. One common complaint is that there was not enough time spent building the relationship between Peeta and Katniss. Other discrepancies came with details such as Peeta never having a prosthetic leg, Rue was never actually taken out of the net in the book, Madge was supposed to give Katniss the Mockingjay pin and the biggest one being that the producers left out a few important characters from the book, such as Madge (the mayor's daughter) and Peeta's father.

But even with these few things missing from the movie, The Hunger Games was still a phenomenal movie. Jennifer Lawrence did an amazing job as Katniss and viewers could actually feel the emotions she put into her acting. Some of the scenes were so emotional and acted out so perfectly, I couldn't help but cry.

All in all, I would give the movie a nine out ten rating, and I highly recommend that everyone go and see it, or wait until it comes out on DVD/Blu-Ray and rent/buy it.

With all of that said, fans are going to have to wait for two years until the sequel to the book, Catching Fire, hits the big screen. Even though that seems like a long time, it seems unlikely that anyone is going to forget that the sequel is being made. In the meantime The Hunger Games is bound to be the talk of the people for the next few weeks across the state, country, and the globe.

ana, and Florida. The teams that they lost to during the regular season were all pretty close and all of their losses were to ranked teams except for Illinois. Five out of their seven losses were by a margin of below ten. Aaron Craft is the point guard and is very scrappy averaging over two steals per game, so look for him to get after it on the defensive end. Ohio State also has the likes of Jared Sullinger, who is a monster. Even though he is not the tallest man, he is very thick. Ohio State is a team that has a chance to win it all.

The Kansas Jayhawks are another team that has made it to the final four, having an opportunity to go all the way. Kansas has an impressive front court, forwards and big men, with Thomas Robinson and Jeff Withey. Thomas Robinson is an all-american averaging a double-double with 18 points and 12 boards while Jeff Withey is a monster at the defensive end with 20 blocks in the last four tournament games.

The x-factor of this team, in my opinion, is Tyshawn Taylor. Tyshawn is the senior point guard and has been very streaky, scoring 20, 10, 10, 6, and 22 in the tournament respectively by round. If he plays well then the Jayhawks should do well, especially with a coach like Bill Self. Coach Self has won a championship not too long ago, 2008 to be exact, and has won the AP coach of the year, Sporting News coach of the year, Big 12 coach of the year, and WAC coach of the year awards. This is a very strong team and is the team that I believe will win it all.

March is coming to an end and so is this exciting tournament. This tournament has been full of upsets and surprises, but it is now down to the best teams. This is always one of the most exciting sporting events for me all year and I'm sure that it is for many people. Sports fans will be watching this come to an end this week-

And now there are four in NCAA Tournament

By Nathan Deavers

March is ending and so is March Madness as the NCAA Men's Basketball Tournament is wrapping up. There are four teams left with a shot at the 2012 title; #1 Kentucky, #4 Louisville, #2 Ohio State, and #2 Kansas. There will be two games on Saturday, March 31 at 6:09 and 8:49 on CBS. Kentucky and Louisville will be playing first followed by the Ohio State and Kansas game. The winners of those games will play against each other in the finals on Monday.

The Kentucky and Louisville game is a game that is tough to predict. Kentucky has only two losses on the year, ones from a buzzer beating three against Indiana and a loss to Vanderbilt in the SEC championship. The Wildcats from Kentucky have not even really had a close game, as they have won by at least twelve points every game in this tournament.

They even beat Baylor handily and ran away from Indiana, the team that was their only regular season defeat all year. Anthony Davis, one of the best players in the league this year, is leading the charge, so the Wildcats are sure to have a good chance in making the championship game. Davis is averaging a double-double with 14 points per game, 10 rebounds per game, and averaging almost 5 blocks per game, which has been breaking records this year. Kentucky was also undefeated in conference play and that has not happened since 2003 by any team in all of Division I. Kentucky also has John Calipari as a coach, who has earned the honor of National Coach of the Year three times and has a record of 503-152 for his coaching career. This team is looking good to win the whole thing.

Louisville is a four seed, but that does not mean that they should be looked past, they are a hot team. The team that is hot is the team that is usually the most feared, look at Connecticut in the tournament last year. They were not the best team, but they were the team playing the best at the time. Louisville has a balanced team, having Peyton Siva dishing out the assists, Chane Behanan and Gorgui Dieng on the boards and defensive paint, and with balanced scoring from everybody. With Rick Pitino at the helm, a man who has led three different schools to the final four and has a national championship under his belt, they are sure to put up a fight.

Ohio State and Kansas are the other two teams left in this tournament and are both number two seeds in the tournament. Ohio State is the team that beat Syracuse and is very dangerous right now. They beat teams like Michigan State, Michigan, Wisconsin, Indi-
