

Tough loss for Raider girls, batsmen silenced

The Lady Raiders traveled to East Syracuse-Minoa on Wednesday to face the Spartans in a league matchup of two top teams. The result was a hard fought game on a cold spring night which Fulton ended up dropping 9-8 when a last ditch effort to tie it at 9 went wrong.

The Raider side was down 4-3 going into the half and could not seem to gain the advantage in the second despite tying the Spartans 5-5 in the second stanza.

Leading the way for Fulton was junior attackmen Kate Rothrock, who scored 4 goals on the night and received assistance from fellow classmate Erica Knaub, senior Jordan Rizzo, and sophomores Amelia Coakley and Julia Ludington who all tickled the twine once for the Raider cause. Adding an assist was another sophomore in Casey Shannon. Torrie Whelsky played well in the cage totaling 9 saves in the loss.

Dominating the game for ES-M was Sam Dooling, who tallied 5 points on 4 goals and one assist. Five other players each scored one apiece to pull out the win and net minder Courtney Notaro recorded 6 saves in her effort.

The loss drops the lady laxers to 2-1 overall and 1-1 in the league. ES-M continues their run and is 3-0 in the league and 3-1 overall. Hope is nowhere near gone for the Raiders since it was a good learning experience and will help them build on their foundation in hopes of bringing back playoff glory.

Hallway dawdlers know no class distinction

By Madeline Clark

It seems like every year I hear upper-classmen complain about how the freshmen are lacking in proper hall way etiquette. The corridors are littered with catty comments about how the high school yearlings mander about GRB without a care in the world and act as though they were gentle fauns caught in the headlights of an eighteen wheeler whenever they make accidental contact with other human beings. And to be fair, my fellow upper-classmen are partially right, but what they neglect to realize is that EVERYONE is guilty of this mentality once in a while.

As a self-proclaimed, "eternal freshman," I am okay with the fact that I too am guilty of awkward hallway conduct. If it were a crime to continually dodge my fellow pupils as though they were un-stoppable juggernauts of a mega-sized parallel universe, then I would be sentenced to life without parole. And why is this you may ask?

"If it were a crime to continually dodge my fellow pupils as though they were un-stoppable juggernauts of a mega-sized parallel universe, then I would be sentenced to life without parole."

I contribute my personal experiences with dilly-dallying between classes to the many duties as a student. The last thing I'm thinking about on my way to economics is how to maneuver around the sophomore ahead of me, or the senior juxtaposed to my position. My mind wanders to the innermost parts of my brain where file cabinets of my daily tasks are stored, not to how I should proceed down the stairwell, so please have patience.

If not with me then please, be patient with the other hapless victims of occupied-mind syndrome. We are a special breed whose nature is one of being scatter brained. "Improper" hallway walkers are a kind whose abilities are spread across the board and thus temporarily incapable of functioning in favor of the most basic human motor skills.

Do not cast foul language upon those who cannot see the back of your shoes in front of them for some omniscient yet profound reason. Be tolerant of the awkward hallway pedestrian, for they know not what they do. They are spread thin and the added stress of proceeding with grace down the crowded sectors of GRB only tears at the mere threads that hold this preoccupied creature together.

Think of all the times that you yourself may be an "eternal freshman." Reflect upon the many instances in which your person may be temporarily incapacitated by the toils of your daily responsibilities. Do not turn up your nose at the awkward hallway walker because you may very well be one yourself. It is not just the freshman who is often dumbfounded when it comes to hallway conduct; it is the sophomore, junior and senior. We are all in the same boat here at the high school, and blaming one group or another does nothing. Be patient for the awkward hallway passerby

What's for lunch? How about homemade soup?

Here are some delectable mid-day meals to give you a warm boost to finish off the day. Even though it's spring, the weather can quite cold, so I know the family will love these fulfilling, heartfelt family meals!

Homemade Chicken Noodle Soup: With the whole chunks of these hearty vegetables, and the juicy pieces of chicken, this soup makes a perfect mid-day meal, sure to warm up the whole family.

Ingredients:

- 1 boneless chicken breast half, cooked and diced
- 2 cups water

- 2 carrots, chopped
- 1 zucchini, diced
- 1 clove garlic, minced
- 1/2 teaspoon chicken broth base

Directions:

Put cooked chicken meat and water in a large pot and bring to a boil. Add the carrots, zucchini and garlic and simmer all together for 5 to 10 minutes. Add the chicken broth and simmer for an additional 5 minutes. Serve.

Ham and Potato Soup: This soup is creamy, and hearty. It is very easy and with the ability to change and add whatever you want, such as more ham, potatoes, and so on, and it still turns out great.

Ingredients:

- 3 1/2 cups peeled and diced potatoes
- 1/3 cup diced celery
- 1/3 cup finely chopped onion
- 3/4 cup diced cooked ham
- 3 1/4 cups water
- 2 tablespoons chicken bouillon granules

- 1/2 teaspoon salt, or to taste
- 1 teaspoon ground white or black pepper, or to taste
- 5 tablespoons butter
- 5 tablespoons all-purpose flour
- 2 cups milk

Directions:

Combine the potatoes, celery, onion, ham and water in a stockpot. Bring to a boil, and then cook over medium heat until potatoes are tender, about 10 to 15 minutes. Stir in the chicken bouillon, salt and pepper.

In a separate saucepan, melt butter over medium-low heat. Whisk in flour with a fork, and cook, stirring constantly until thick, about 1 minute. Slowly stir in milk as not to allow lumps to form until all of the milk has been added. Continue stirring over medium-low heat until thick, 4 to 5 minutes.

Stir the milk mixture into the stockpot, and cook soup until heated through. Serve immediately.

Bizarre news of the day: Different type of horseshoe

A German designer has created a bizarre new range of shoes - from dead animal parts. Iris Schieferstein, 45, spends months creating high heel horse hooves, stilettos from snake skins and sandals sculpted from doves.

Ms. Schieferstein, who designed a pair of horse hooves for pop singer Lady Gaga, sells the shoes for up to £3,900. She collects the dead animals from her local butcher in Berlin, then spends a week stripping out the meat and bones from the animal's feet before the skin is sent to a tanner to be preserved.

The sculptor then sets the skin - complete with fur still in place - around a shoe model before doing any needlework to add in-soles and lining. She said: "I love horses and I love shoes so I thought this would be perfect. Horses have a beautiful walk and I wanted to recreate that with my footwear.

"Creating the shoes is ugly work, taking the meat out is not nice, like any taxidermy. When I began working with dead animals I would pick them up from the street. But they are protected by the government in Germany, and so after ten years they tried to put me in prison. Now I use my butcher.

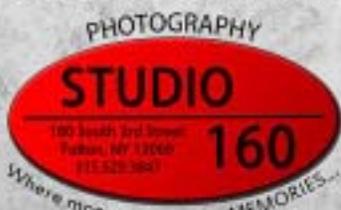

"Once the shoes are made I wear them to make sure they work, although they would not be suitable to wear around the house."

Now that gives a whole new meaning to horseshoes.

Finding the friendly side of New York City

By Vanessa Langdon

New York City may get a bad rap for being full of unkind people, but for this reporter a spring break to the “city that never sleeps” was met with never-ending kindness from a complete stranger!

Going to visit colleges in the city was coupled with tickets to see the Broadway musical How to Succeed in Business without even Trying starring Nick Jonas. As an avid Jonas Brothers fan with no shame, I stood outside the theater for four hours on Tuesday, April 3 in hopes of meeting the 19 year old star.

Standing there for four hours I experienced the kindness of a Jonas Brothers fan. Standing with a small group of four girls from all walks of life coming from Sacramento, California, and Atlanta, Georgia to Denmark the time flew by as I stood there from 6 pm to about 8:30. I was right against the barricade in the front positioned directly in the center, a prime spot to meet and hopefully get a picture and an autograph from Nick Jonas.

But then it all came crashing down as the security guard, Neil, who had talked to my mom and I earlier in the night, told everyone on the right side barricade where I was standing that it was for ticket holders for that night's performance only. Then it occurred to me and to Melanie, the girl from Denmark I had become friends with, that the girl who had been running out from the show was the reason we were being moved. Apparently she was friends with the girls standing on the left barricade who had just asked us if we had tickets to that night's show. Our reply was, “why would we have tickets to that night's show if we had been standing outside the entire time?” Armed with this information, the vindictive girl went and told the security guard, so with less than an hour to go until the moment when Nick Jonas would grace us all with his presence, I was being forced to move from my prime spot.

I was not shy about telling Neil that I had been standing there since six! His response, “there’s still a lot of room on the other side, move and you’ll have a good spot,” was not very sympathetic. I reluctantly moved and was stuck in the second row behind the girls who were friends with the whistle blower.

It would be an understatement to say that I was disappointed and sad and that my mother was upset. I was a mess and couldn’t believe it had happened; my mother was furious. I was beginning to cry because I had gotten my hopes up high, and my mother who was standing behind me, was apparently staring daggers into Neil. Neil kept looking back at me, “Why are you so sad?”

He knew why, he had taken away my prime spot!

He then told those girls standing in front of me “Look what you girls did you made that poor girl cry.” Their response was a shoulder shrug. Neil then went inside the theater to do I do not know what, but when he emerged he did something wonderful, he moved the barricade over and made a spot for me at the far left corner, right in the front! I was ecstatic!

I could not wait for him to come out, it was down to the last half hour, and the security guards began to adjust the barricades to fully protect Nick Jonas from the teen girl fury. I ended up more in the middle of the barricade, almost directly across from where I started out almost four hours earlier. I was so happy and made friends with the girl I was now next to, a freshman at Manhattan College named Kaylee.

Then he came out and went to the far barricade, where I had started out, and made his way completely around the barricade, meeting, signing and taking pictures with everyone he could. I took three pictures with my phone of him on the far barricade to test out whether I needed flash or not and as he made his way over to my side the unthinkable happened...my phone DIED!

I was shocked, how could that happen at this exact moment? I did not even have a backup camera with me; my mom’s camera had died earlier that day at the MET. I was clueless as to how I could fix this problem and I was crushed after standing there for four hours to have it all be ruined by a dead iPhone. But thanks to a kind New Yorker whom I had just met an hour earlier I was saved, Kaylee offered to take my picture for me with her seemingly professional camera. She was so nice about it; she offered, I did not ask.

He came over and first signed something for me and then asked me how I was doing I said, "Good!" and asked him the same, but unfortunately he was unable to respond because he had a swarm of screaming fans trying to get his attention and then Kaylee took our picture, our glorious picture!

Kaylee did not hesitate when asked how I would get the picture, she instantly sent me a friend request on Facebook and said she would upload the picture that night and then offered to walk around Manhattan with us looking for a place to print the picture.

So we walked around and found an open pharmacy with a picture machine, a broken picture machine. But we did not give up, we found another one on the opposite side of the theater with a working picture machine and printed three copies.

Chittenango Bears.

Chittenango (1-2) chipped in six runs off nine hits in starting pitcher Dan Bolster's four innings of work. Wes Burghardt and Erik Kurz paced the Bears with three hits apiece, while Devin Christopher, Aaron Endres and Sean Cliff each had two hits. Greg Jasek and Mike Messinger each had a hit and Messinger and Burghardt also tabbed four RBIs for the away team. Sean Cliff pitched a near perfect five innings, allowing just one hit while walking two. Fulton had two hits and worked two walks, the lone hits coming from seniors Brandon Guernsey, who raised his team leading batting average to .429, and fellow senior Dan Kenyon, who found a way onto the base paths twice, also walking in the fourth.

The 1-3 Raiders are back in action tomorrow at Cortland

Besides saving my life with the camera Kaylee, then saved my life a second time when she was helping us find the subway, as she stopped from walking directly into traffic!

Kaylee was the nicest person we met during our four day stay in New York, but every random person on the street we asked for directions responded politely and was happy to help out two tourists. From the guy in Little Italy to the woman in Brooklyn, not a single person sitting on the street corner gave us a rude look when we asked which way to this landmark or where the nearest subway was.

Going to New York City just solidified my resolve to attend college there from meeting one of my favorite people to encountering countless nice people all over the city!
