

Trump, Clinton emerge as Super Tuesday “winners”

By Julia Polly

With the results in from Super Tuesday, it is clear that Donald Trump and Hillary Clinton were the winners, taking seven states each in the race for their parties respective presidential candidacy. Projections of nomination day results include the two as the future candidates as well.

As for how many delegates a candidate must have in order to win by June 14th, the last Primary which takes place in the District of Columbia, the magic number is 2,383 delegates for the Democratic party candidacy and 1,237 delegates for the Republican party candidacy.

Out of all the primaries that have taken place so far, the number of delegates left is 3,286 for the Democratic party and 1,777 for the Republican party.

Following Super Tuesday, the tally for the Republicans is at 319 for Trump, 226 for Cruz, 110 for Rubio, 25 for Kasich, and 8 for Carson. For the Democrats, which includes the numbers of superdelegates each candidate has so far, it is 1,051 for Clinton and 427 for Sanders.

The reasoning behind the major lead for Clinton is due to her reported backing of 455 superdelegates vs. Sanders 22.

A reminder about superdelegates, though, is that before the nomination day for the presidential candidacy they can change whoever they support right up until the actual day for voting. What this means, in all actuality, is that for the Democrats, the numbers without the superdelegates are 596 for Clinton and 405 for Sanders: a much closer number than the assumed count of Clinton’s 1,051 vs Sanders 427.

This is not to disregard superdelegate votes, but a reminder that what they can choose to do is change their backing for whichever candidate they would like as long as it is before nomination day when the votes are all tallied in the final process of announcing the nomination.

States that are coming up for future primaries are Kansas (33 available delegates), Louisiana (51 available delegates), and Nebraska (25 available delegates) on March 5. This means that there are a total of 109 available delegates for the Democratic Party. Upcoming Republican Primaries on March 5 are Kansas (40 available delegates), Kentucky (46 available delegates), Louisiana(46 available delegates), and Maine (23 available delegates). In all 155 delegates are available for the Republican party.

All newly eligible voters are reminded to register to vote, as the primary for New York is April 19. If you are 18 by November 8th, 2016, you are eligible to register to vote and vote in the primaries. Absentee ballots are another option, if you are out of state or unable to go out and vote on the day of voting, it is possible to still vote by filling out an absentee ballot.

Negativity drags everything down

By Kassady Bowering

People always complain that while watching the news all they hear is bad news, bringing their moods down. Many question whether or not this is affecting the economy in any way.

The more the people hear about how the economy is failing them and their children, the less likely they are to spend money to stimulate the economy or the stock market. A lot of talk about how bad the economy is has been circulating due to the political debates, and the end result is that many people feel worse off than they really are.

Greg Valliere, chief strategist at Horizon Investments, even goes so far as to say that, "The negativity is extraordinary from the politicians." The economy is not as bad as many would think, surely it is not as great as it could be either. The truth, however, is that the economy is growing and unemployment is back under five percent for the first time since 2008, and people are still hiring. There should not be any concerns of slipping into a recession anytime soon.

However with all of this negativity going around there is no hard evidence that the politicians have actually affected the economy, yet. "There is a chance you will do real damage. You have a big megaphone and you don't want to harm the economy," American economist Douglas Holtz-Eakin said about the political negativity. As of right now oil and stocks are moving practically in sync, and oil has more influence with the economy than Donald Trump, or Bernie Sanders.
